the Euphrates River. He went [to] Elkunirsa, the husband of Ashertu, [and] entered the tent [of] Elkunirsa.

§2 (1 A i 8–21) Elkunirsa looked at Baal and asked him: "[Why] have you come?" Baal said: "When I came into your house, Ashertu sent young women to me, (saying:) 'Come sleep with me.' I refused. (Then) she . . . ed me [and] spoke [thus]: 'Stay behind me, [and] I will stay behind you. Else I will press you down with my [word] and [stab] you with my [. . .].' That is why I have come, my father. I did not come to you [in the person] of a messenger; I myself [have come] to you. Ashertu is rejecting you, her own[1] husband. [Although she is] your wife, yet she keeps sending to me: 'Sleep [with me].'" Elkunirsa [replied] to Baal: "Go threaten(?) her. [. . . Ashertu], my wife, and humble her."

§3 (1 A i 22–27) [Baal] heard the words of Elkunirsa and [went] to Ashertu. Baal said to Ashertu: "I have killed your seventy-seven [children]. (Your) eighty-eight I have killed." [When] Ashertu heard the humiliating report, her mind within her became sad. She appointed mourning [women]. And she lamented for seven years. [The . . . s] ate and drank for them. [Break of undetermined length. When the text of the next fragment begins, Ashertu is speaking to her husband Elkunirsa.]

§4 (2 B 1–3, 2 A ii 2–3) "[. . .] I will press [Baal] down [with my word. With] my [. . .] I will stab him. And I will sleep with you." [Elkunirsa] heard and said to his wife: "Come [take] Baal as your [prisoner(?)], and do to him as you wish."

§5 (2 A ii 4–16) Anat-Astarte heard those words. She became a cup in Elkunirsa's hand. She became an owl(?) and perched on his wall. Anat-Astarte heard the words which husband and wife spoke to one another. Elkunirsa and his wife went to her bed and slept together. But Anat-Astarte flew off like a bird across the desert. In the desert she found Baal and said to him: "O Baal, [do not . . . the . . .] of Ashertu. Do not drink wine together. [Do not . . .] toward [. . .] is seeking [. . .]."

[The tablet breaks here. Only a few signs of the following column are preserved. It would seem that Elkunirsa and Ashertu succeed in injuring Baal, for in the next fragment Baal is treated for injuries.]

§6 (3 A iii 1–19) [. . .] dark [. . .] the gods his words [. . .] holds from the member. And to him [. . .] dark [. . .] the netherworld deities [. . .] up sleep. [The . . . s] . . . Anat-Astarte said (to?) the nether[world deities]: "If/When [. . . his] penis, tendons, muscles, [. . . . He(?) is] filthy with excrement. I will proceed to [. . .] (to?) you [singular]. [. . .] will become worse. Why have you sent[2] living persons to [the Dark] Earth?" [. . .] seized Baal's members, calves, like a snake. They [. . .]ed them [. . .]. Thus they said: "[. . .] his wife and children went [. . .], and they set up [. . .]." [. . .] began to say: "Do not [. . .] him. I will conduct [. . .] and [. . .] dark [. . .] and they will come(?)/see(?) [. . .]." [The following context is broken away. The next fragment seems to describe Baal being exorcised.]

§7 (4 A iii 1–6) [. . .] up [. . .] he went to Baal [. . .] Mother Goddesses to him [. . .] re-created [Baal. . . .] like a [. . . they] made him radiant.[3]

§8 (4 A iii 7–11) The exorcists [. . .] to Baal. A man from Amurru, a man from Ana[. . .], chief of the . . . men. [They] exorcised him and [purified him] from oath, offense, [sin, evil] word [and . . .].

§9 (4 A iii 12–15) Baal's body [became pure. . . .] Anat-Astarte [said] to [. . . : "The . . . s have] re[created] Baal. [They have brought him back up] from the Dark [Earth." . . .] [The text is broken away. The next fragment treats the same subject.]

§10 (4 B iv 3–11) [. . .] if/when . . . to [. . .] I made. [. . .] the netherworld deities [. . .] Elkunirsa [. . .] brought. Anat-Astarte [. . .] conducted [. . .] appointed [. . .]. His/Her one child [. . .] (s)he made sleepy(?). [. . .]

§11 (4 B iv 12–19) [. . .] . . . [. . .] internal [. . . too from his head] a hair. He/She took sight from his [eyes]. He/She took hearing [from his ears]. He/She took . . . [from his. . . . He/She took] . . . from [his . . .] from his body [. . .]. [The rest of the text is broken away.]

Notes

1. The text erroneously has "your husband."
2. Or perhaps: "Why has he sent."
3. Or: "made him perfect"; cf. CHD sub misriwahh-.

Sources

In making these translations I have used published text editions or created my own editions based upon the arrangement of the sources in Laroche 1971 (abbreviated as CTH). For this reason it is unnecessary to list individual cuneiform texts used in creating the editions which underlie the translations in this book. In most cases, therefore, I only direct the interested reader to Laroche's CTH. In other cases I follow a particular published edition, e.g., Texts 16–18 and 21. Specific cuneiform texts are given in the bibliography only when there are very few which make up the text. The number of each entry corresponds to the number of the text translated in the main portion of the book.

Glossary

Alalu Mesopotamian god who in the Kumarbi myths appears as the first king of the gods and father of Kumarbi. See Text 14.

Allani Hurrian goddess. Mistress of the Netherworld. Also known in Hittite texts as the Sungoddess of the Earth/Netherworld. See Text 18a "The Song of Release, Part One: Proemium."

AMMATU Unit of linear measure (=gipessar, probably 0.5 m.) equal to 1/30 of an IKU (probably 15 m.) or 1/3,000 of a DANNA (probably 1.5 km.).

Anat-Astarte The sister of the god Baal, who seeks to protect him against the evil plots of the goddess Asherah.

Anu Mesopotamian sky god, who in the Hurro-Hittite Kumarbi myths appears as the second king of the gods and the father of Tessub and his brothers.

ANUNNAKI A very important group of gods, who in the Hurro-Hittite conception presently dwell in the netherworld. The term is a Sumerogram, which probably corresponds to Hittite "primeval gods" (karuiles siunes).

Apzuwa What in the Hittite Kumarbi myths is written as a city name is a transformation of an old Sumerian name for the subterranean sweet waters, the home of the god Enki-Ea.

Arinna The home of the cult of a Sun Goddess, who was the principal female deity in the Hittite pantheon. This Sun Goddess was eventually equated with the Hurrian goddess Hebat.

arkammi A musical instrument, paired with the galgalturi.

Asherah Wife of the West Semitic god El (or Elkunirsa). See Text 23.

Asmunikal The queen of King Arnuwanda I, successor and son-in-law of Tudhaliya II.

Astabi See ZABABA.

Baal Epithet of the West Semitic god Haddu. See Text 23.

BALAG(.DI) A stringed instrument.

Basalt A common epithet for the stone monster Ullikummi.

DANNA Roughly a mile. See AMMATU.

Dark Earth A term for the netherworld.

Ea Mesopotamian god of the subterranean sweet waters, lord or king of wisdom. Also known there as Enki. For Ea in Hittite Anatolia see Archi 1993a.

Earth Hittite Daganzipas, personified as a goddess in Text 14.

Elkunirsa The Hittite spelling of the West Semitic divine name "El, the Creator of Earth." He was the husband of the goddess Asherah (=Ashertu) and lived in a tent at the headwaters of the Euphrates (=Mala) River.

eyan*-tree An evergreen tree which served as a religious symbol. An eyan-tree was planted in front of the homes of persons exempted from certain public obligations, such as corvée work or taxes.

Frost Tentative translation of habhimas which designates a powerful personified force in Text 7. Since he appears after the sun disappears and his effect on gods and nature is to paralyze them, it seems likely that he is a manifestation of cold.

galaktar A plant product highly esteemed to produce tranquillity. The mode of consumption is never specified, whether eating or sniffing. Some think it was a drug.

galgalturi A percussion instrument.

GUDU An official in the cult. The Sumerian term meant "anointed," but we have no evidence that the Hittites so understood it. In small temples he formed together with the SANGA ("priest") and the AMA DINGIR-LIM ("mother of the god") the minimal staff. See Text 1.

halenzu A plant which grew in the moor and could be found on the surface of lakes and ponds.

handatar A word that can denote a god's power to control the course of events. See Text 16, § 1.1.

Hannahanna A Mother Goddess whose advice is regularly sought by other gods in the Old Hittite Vanishing God Myths. Her name appears to be a reduplicated form of the Hittite word "grandmother."

Hapantali A Hattian god who figures in Old Hittite myths.

hapupi*-bird A bird of the steppes and wilderness areas, possibly an owl.

Hebat Hurrian goddess, consort of Tessub. Queen of the gods. Equated by the Hittites with the Sun Goddess of Arinna.

Hedammu A huge male sea monster which terrorizes gods and men in Text 17. He is probably the child of Kumarbi and Sertapsuruhi, the daughter of the Sea God.

hunting bag An important religious symbol which figures in the Old Hittite Vanishing God Myths. In festival descriptions the hunting bag (Hittite kursas) represented the god LAMMA and served as a focus of his worship.

Hupasiya A man from the town of Ziggaratta who plays a role in the Illuyanka myth.

IKU See AMMATU.

Illuyanka A Hattian or Hittite common noun meaning "serpent" used as the designation of the foe of the Storm God in the Illuyanka Myth.

Impaluri The vizier of the Sea God in the Hurro-Hittite Kumarbi myths.

Inara A goddess, a daughter of the great Storm God, who seems to have roamed the steppe, perhaps as a huntress. She figures in Old Hittite myths with a Hattian background.

Irsirras A group of deities who at the bidding of Kumarbi, carry Ullikummi secretly to the netherworld after his birth.

ISHTAR* instruments Stringed instruments similar to lyres. Large and small varieties are mentioned in texts and depicted in art. The large variety is so big it must be carried by two grown men.

Izzummi Vizier of the god Ea.

Kamrusepa A goddess of magic. Her Hattian name was Kattahziwuri.

Kanzura A divine mountain who is born from Anu's seed which impregnated Kumarbi. A brother of Tessub.

Kattahziwuri See Kamrusepa.

Kubaba Goddess attested already in Anatolia of the pre-Old Hittite period, but integral to the Hurrian pantheon. Her chief cult center was Carchemish.

KUKUBU A vessel of unknown capacity, used to contain fluids.

Kumarbi A grain deity, equated with Semitic Dagan in god lists from Ugarit. Son of the god Alalu. Third king of the gods. Called "wise king" and "Father of the Gods." His chief cult center was the North Mesopotamian city of Urkis. Chief antagonist of Tessub in the cycle of Kumarbi myths. Couples sexually with various females, including a wife, Sertapsuruhi the daughter of the Sea God, and becomes the father of many gods and monsters (Ullikummi, Hedammu, Silver, and possibly LAMMA).

Kummiya The home of the god Tessub, located in Northern Syria.

kuntarra*-shrines The holiest of holies of the chief god Tessub. Located in heaven in Text 18, §69, but mentioned in a Hittite treaty as a real building in the Anatolian city of Tarhuntassa. The word is Hurrian, the determined plural of kundari (kundari-na > kundarra). Some scholars (see Pecchioli Daddi and Polvani 1990: 131 n. 20) think the mountain name Ganzura = Ka/undur(n)a is related to this word.

LAMMA A Hurrian male deity, whom the god Kumarbi and Ea for a time made king of the gods.

liti An oil-yielding plant.

mal A quality prized in warriors.

Mukisanu The vizier and messenger of Kumarbi.

Nara Napsara Although written as two divine names in succession, this combination denotes a single netherworld god, the brother of the god Ea. Occasionally the name is written simply Nara.

Nerik A city in north central Asia Minor along the lower course of the Marassanta River (=Turkish Kizilirmak). It was a major cult center for the Storm God, which was cut off from Hittite control for many years and recovered by Hattusili III.

palhi*-vessel A large, wide-mouthed pot having a lid, and occasionally made of bronze. Used to contain beverages and to store grain.

parhuenas A sweet plant.

Primeval Deities The oldest generation of the gods in the Old Syrian-Hurrian pantheon, regarded as having been dethroned by the newer generation headed by Tessub and banished to the netherworld. Among them we may recognize Anu, Antu, Enlil, Ninlil, Nara-Napsara, Minki, Ammunki, Ammezzadu, Muntara, Mutmuntara, Aduntarri, Zulki, Irbitiga, and Ishara. They still receive offerings and are addressed in a number of Hurrian rituals translated into Hittite and preserved in the archives of Hattusa. In the present collection of myths they appear in the so-called Kumarbi cycle, first in the proem of the Song of Kumarbi (Text 14), where the entire cycle of songs is addressed to them, and then individual members of the group (such as Nara-Napsara) in the narrative portion of the Song of LAMMA (Text 15 §8). For discussion see Laroche 1973, Lambert 1978, Archi 1990, Haas 1994: 111–15, and Popko 1995: 99.

Purulli A Hittite festival celebrated in the spring. See Text 1.

Sauska Bellicose and beautiful sister of the god Tessub. Functionally similar to the West Semitic goddess Anat-Astarte, sister of Baal. Written ISHTAR in the texts, often specifically ISHTAR of Nineveh.

Sea God In the Old Hittite myths he appears as the kidnapper of the Sun God and the father of the wife of Telipinu. In the New Hittite Kumarbi myths he is allied with Kumarbi, to whom he gives his daughter Sertapsuruhi in marriage.

Seri and Hurri The divine bulls who draw Tessub's cart.

Sun God In Old Hittite myths he is the Hattian solar deity Estan, son of the Great Storm God and brother of Telipinu. In New Hittite Kumarbi myths he is the Hurrian solar deity Simige, an ally of Tessub.

Sun Goddess of Arinna The chief goddess in the New Hittite pantheon, whose consort was the great Storm God. In the New Kingdom they were identified with Hebat and Tessub.

Sun Goddess of the Earth (=nether world) Her name in Old Hittite, Hattian contexts is unknown. In New Hittite texts with a Hurrian background she is referred to either by the descriptive title "Sun Deity of the Earth" or by the Hurrian word Allani "the lady."

Suwaliyat See Tasmisu.

Tabarna Originally a personal name, this term came to be a title or designation of all Hittite emperors. The practice is similar to the Roman use of Caesar.

Takiti Maidservant of the goddess Hebat.

Tasmisu Hurrian name of the brother and vizier of Tessub, antagonist of Kumarbi. His Hittite name was Suwaliyat.

Tawannanna Originally the name of a Hittite queen, this term came to be a title or designation of all Hittite queens. See Tabarna.

Telipinu A Storm God, son of the great Storm God, whose anger and disappearance form the subject of several Old Hittite myths. Like other Storm Gods, Telipinu gave success to agricultural activities such as plowing, sowing seed, and harvesting.

tenawas An evil force, sometimes portrayed topographically, which seizes souls in the afterlife, causing forgetfulness. It may be compared to Lethe, the mythological Greek River of Forgetfulness.

Tessub The supreme Storm God. Reigning king of the gods according to Hurrian theology. Son of Anu. His consort is Hebat (=Sun Goddess of Arinna). His sons are Sarruma and the Storm God of Nerik. His vizier is Tasmi(su). His two divine bulls are Seri(su) and Hurri (or Tella). His principal cult center and "home" is Kummiya in Northern Mesopotamia.

Thousand Gods A standard way of referring to the entire pantheon.

Tutelary Deity (Sumerian LAMMA). A type of deity whose function is to protect either an individual worshiper or some aspect of the physical world.

Ubelluri A Hurrian god like the Greek Atlas, who dwells in the netherworld and holds up heaven and earth.

Ullikummi Blind and deaf stone monster which Kumarbi engenders from sexual union with a huge boulder or cliff.

War God See ZABABA.

Wurunkatte See ZABABA.

ZABABA Sumerogram denoting the Hittite War God. His Hattian name was Wurunkatte ("king of the land"). In the Kumarbi myths he seems to be Astabi, an ally of Tessub.

Zaliyanu A deified mountain near the city of Nerik.
